

GUN DISARM:

A suspicious man approaches, prompting Jim Wagner (right) to assume the alert stance (1). As soon as he sees the man's gun, Wagner steps off the line of fire in case he has a sympathetic reflex and pulls the trigger (2). The defender grabs the weapon with both hands and keeps the muzzle pointed away from his body (3-4). Because the natural reaction of the attacker is to pull to regain control of his weapon, Wagner moves with the man's force and slams the gun into his head (5). After stunning him with one or two strikes, Wagner rips the firearm from his hands (6). He backs away and, if necessary, shoots as he retreats (7). If the gun fails to fire, Wagner can use it as an impact weapon (8).

What do I do if a guy on the street "mad dogs" me?

Whenever someone gives you a threatening look, you must take it seriously. That means start preparing mentally and physically for conflict without making it obvious to the aggressor. Remember that an aggressive look isn't legal justification to use physical force. Once you've prepared yourself, the best solution is to maintain a confident demeanor and move away from the threat.